PHARMACY

Medicines worth crores are manufactured in our country, of which many are exported and the rest are consumed in increasingly large quantities by people from all walks of life. Though Ayurveda and homeopathy have a niche of their own, the bulk of the consumption of medicine is of allopathic drugs. These medicines have to be manufactured under very stringent quality control and even their dispensation has to be done under the supervision of qualified person, since medicine can save and destroy lives.

Also, Pharmaceuticals are one area in which our country has done a great deal of indigenous research and many government and private companies are involved in development of newer and better medicines for various ailments.

All these activities require Pharmacists, persons who have studied the origin and chemistry of drugs, their preparation and their dosages and the methodology of their dispensation and use. The demand for Pharmacists is steadily growing as medical science takes strides forward and more and more people are becoming health conscious and willing to spend money to buy medicines for keeping up their health. The pharmacist plays an important role since on his expertise depends lives of patients and recovery.

Persons with B. Pharmacy and above work in pharmaceutical companies in production, product marketing, quality control, research etc. They are also employed by large hospitals and research houses. There is a demand for Pharmacists in western countries also; many Indians have done well in this field. Diploma holders are employed in the above said organizations at lower level and they also find vast avenues of employment in pharmacies and medical shops for which it is compulsory by law to employ pharmacist.

The work

In Pharmacy, one perfects the art of drug preparation and dispensation. It is all about the development and preparation of drugs from natural and synthetic source. Pharmacists act as consultants to health practitioners and to general public concerning adverse drug reactions, side effects and interactions. Pharmacists also specialize in particular remedies for diseases like diabetes, asthma, high blood pressure etc.

Research

Pharmacists can find work with government sponsored and private research laboratories. They study drug compounds and properties to derive enhanced formulae to the existing drugs. For those enamored by the sights and smells of chemicals and chemical compound research is an apt medium.

The Central Drug Research Institute at Lucknow, National Chemical Lab in Pune and Indian Institute of Chemical Technology, Hyderabad are some of the government research institutes in the country.

Pharmaceutical companies

The Pharmaceutical industry is a lucrative one, manufacturing and producing both bulk drugs and disease specific drugs. Pharmacists with a management degree can also work as supervisors, plant managers, quality controllers and production managers in the pharmaceutical manufacturing sector. Pharmacists can branch out into administrative responsibilities (Manager, Assistant Managers, Branch Managers, regional Managers and graduate can be the Vice-President and Chairman). Marketing and distribution are important and integral functions where pharmacists play a vital role. Beginning as medical representative, they can move to positions of authority and head the marketing and distribution segments. With global players now entering the Indian market the options available are varied and challenging.

Academia

Pharmacists with higher qualifications can specialize in teaching the subject in educational Institutions. Enhanced remuneration and job satisfaction makes one's profession interesting.

Retail Outlets

Retail or community pharmacists own retail outlets where medicines are stocked and supplied to other independent pharmacies, clinics and dispensaries. They also counsel patients and offer over the counter advice on the contra indication of the medicines if any. Retail outlets also sell medical equipment and operate as chemists as well.

Others

Pharmacist can work in hospital and clinics as well. They are responsible for the procurement, stocking and dispensations of medicines. They can also seek employment in the Food and Drug administration departments of the state governments. They can work as drug and narcotics Inspectors. Entry is through the UPSC and state service examinations. Pharmacist can also work in banks as probationary officers.

Aptitude

A Pharmacist needs to be good in chemistry, have a scientific net of mind, should have an eye for detail and accuracy and his concentration powers should be good and sustained. Pharmacists may also need to have communication skills when dealing with the patients, a certain amount of compassion, patience and the ability to speak local languages.

The Future:

Qualified graduate pharmacists can find employment in teaching, training, research, quality control, production and dispensation. Many of them with a flair for human interactions also get into the marketing, advertising or product development field. Promotions are reasonably smooth, particularly in large organizations and hospitals. In the past few years pharmaceuticals companies in India have been doing exceedingly well and efficient technical employees easily rise up the hierarchy. Those who go on to do M.Pharmacy and Ph. D reach higher positions earlier. Enterprising pharmacists have also set up their own manufacturing or consultancy units and they find it very rewarding to work in the field of medicine along with the doctors and paramedical staff.
